At his very first full time job opportunity, Cary was trained to be a welder and he has never looked back. Welding has been Cary’s occupation his entire life and he has excelled at this craft for the last 30 years by building quality Sterling wheelbarrows and mortar tubs.

To say Cary takes pride in his work is an understatement as he is extremely meticulous with every weld bead he lays down. One of the best examples of the pride in workmanship is the time he was asked to make a special Sterling mortar tub for display at the World of Concrete. Cary carefully explained that it wasn’t necessary to make a special sample for the exhibit since every tub he welded was equally show worthy!

Cary became an employee at Metal Forms via the acquisition of Sterling Handling Equipment by MFC in 2008. After being employed by Sterling for 20 years, the transition to MFC was smooth since Cary immediately sensed a family atmosphere among the employees on Booth Street. Cary explained his feelings by saying: “It’s a great bunch of people to work with. Everybody gets along well and respects each other. It doesn’t matter if it’s 100° in the summer or 30° below in the winter, we all come to MFC and work together as a family.

Cary’s pride and joy is his wife, Shirley, and his two daughters, Valerie and Amanda, along with his four grandsons. His grandsons are split among one daughter living in Illinois and one in Arizona. Besides visiting his daughters and grandsons as much as possible, Cary and his wife like to fish and go “one arm bandit” gambling.
